

Sound Healing Certification

What Hinders Healing

LIFECHANGING
— ENERGY —

WHAT HINDERS HEALING

“There are only two ways to live your life. One is as though nothing is a miracle. The other is as though everything is a miracle.” – Albert Einstein

So what happens when you have a client, a friend, family member (or even you) who doesn't seem to be progressing with sound healing sessions? What could be hindering the healing?

We're going to talk about 9 reasons people don't see the results they desire. First we'll list them, then go through each, one by one.

1. Negativity
2. Having no interest in sound healing
3. Inability to trust
4. A fear of taking responsibility for our self-care
5. Disconnection with the Earth
6. Lack of sleep and rest during the healing process
7. Blockages
8. Denial
9. Fear of Change

Negativity

You may be surprised that there are two sides to negativity – yours as a healer and your client's.

As a healer, you must be very wary of negativity because it is contagious. If you have any negativity in your own life, the client will pick up on it. The client will feel that they cannot trust you to be real or honest, which is a key aspect of healing. They will then find it difficult to open up emotionally, to work with you in a positive way or to heal. As soon as they sense your negativity they will shut down emotionally and stop talking about their issues. They may even refuse to come back for further sessions. This is why it's so important for healers to work hard at staying positive themselves.

From the client side, in order to be healed, people must believe that healing is possible. They must believe in positive change and the possibilities of a better future.

People suffering from a chronic disease often give up on themselves. They completely lose hope and start believing that there is no chance for their recovery. This type of pessimism causes more harm than good as it prevents both physical and mental healing. Remind your client that negative thinking can slow down their recovery process.

This negativity can cause a psychological impact on a person's mind. Negative thoughts will repel positive energy away from their field as well. The doubt in their own capability to rise above all adversities can prevent them from making sincere attempts towards getting well again.

One way to help turn negativity around is to use positive. People need to believe that they are not doomed to suffering; instead, that they will get well if they focus on healing themselves change to optimistic thinking.

Having No Interest in Sound Healing

For some, this lack of interest is based on their past experience with sound and spiritual healing: "I tried that, and it didn't work." For others, they've never tried spiritual and sound healing before, but they just don't see how it could possibly help.

Regardless of the cause, if you're not interested in sound healing, then you won't get much benefit from it.

Our Inability to Trust

It is not possible to practice sound healing without trust. We must trust that sound and energy can change us, and that our body knows exactly what it needs at every moment. When we are able to truly let go and trust, the healing begins automatically.

The trust factor is a huge obstacle to our ability to heal, both on the spiritual and physical levels. If we do not have faith that anything can help us, then there is no way that we can be healed.

Whether your clients are dealing with mental issues such as depression or anxiety, or they are physically struggling with something like cancer or another disease, they need to believe that sound healing or any other form of alternative medicine can actually work for them.

In addition to believing in the prospect of being healed, people also need to believe in their own abilities to change their life for the better. If they believe that they cannot heal themselves from their problems, then there is no way that anyone else will be able help them do it either. So they need to trust you too.

Sound healing is also something that people can't see or grasp even though it requires their full participation. Sometimes they have a problem trusting because they are busy judging the process or trying to control it. Their conscious mind gets in the way of the natural flow of energy and healing. They are not allowing the information to flow within them through the sound current. Allowing is the key word here, which requires trust.

We are all so used to being in control and when we start letting go, it can feel scary. We often resist the process because we are scared of what will "come up" during the session. The process of letting go can be uncomfortable but it is always worth it when you feel better after. The key is to surrender to the sound healing process and allow the energy to flow through you. When you let go, your body will naturally relax, allowing your mind to rest easier. When your mind is at ease, your body will follow suit.

This is why I present my work as an invitation instead of trying to convince people that it works. If you're not ready to believe, then there's no point in me trying to convince you otherwise. I don't have any control over the process anyway! The healer's job is just to help the client relax into a position where they are open to receive the healing. Once this happens healing occurs naturally.

A Fear of Taking Responsibility for Our Self-care.

Healing is about giving yourself permission to heal yourself by focusing on your own healing process, embracing it completely, finding ways to accept what has happened in your past, creating positive energy from within and looking forward with hope.

The dark force of fear can be used as a reason to avoid the work that needs to be done. Fear can also be a manifestation of our inner child's defense mechanism: "If I don't do any work on my healing, then I don't have to risk opening up old wounds. And if I don't open up old wounds, then I won't get hurt."

By ignoring our healing and growth, we avoid taking responsibility for ourselves. We may also demand that others take care of us.

If you are a therapist and you find yourself avoiding certain clients or topics in your healing sessions, ask yourself why you are resisting this particular area of exploration. If you're uncomfortable with it, it's probably because there is an area in your life that needs healing.

We live in a culture that promotes self-neglect and even self-abuse. In our society, we are taught that it's more important to do things for others than it is to care for yourself. This socialization has led many people to feel guilty about doing things that are good for themselves; those who take the time and energy to care for their own health are often seen as being selfish.

Some people may even have had a negative experience with self-care in their childhood, such as being told they were being selfish whenever they tried to attend to their own needs. This can create lasting psychological wounds that make it difficult for adults to take responsibility for their own health, happiness and well-being.

Others may fear taking steps toward greater self-care because they anticipate resistance from others who may not be ready or willing to change their habits or behaviors. For example, you may be hesitant about changing your eating habits if you're worried your partner won't like the changes or will want you to cook separate meals each night.

Disconnection with the Earth

We are not separate from our mother Earth but are a part of her. We need to be in tune with what she has to offer us, as well as what we have to offer her. We need to learn how to love and nurture Mother Earth, as she does for us.

There are two things that I do when I am working with people to help them reconnect with Mother Earth. I use crystal healing and along with sound healing.

When you work with crystals and stones, you need to be aware that they are living beings too. They may not look like it on the outside, but they are alive and filled with energy just like Mother Earth herself. So when we start working with crystals, stones or minerals, we need to be aware of this fact and treat them as such. We must be kind and compassionate towards them, just as we would another person or animal that we care about.

We also need to be aware of the properties of each stone or crystal that we are using during our sound healing journeys. Each stone has a different energy vibration that brings a different experience or feeling. You must choose the right crystal

Perhaps our disconnection from the Earth as a society comes from being told over time that we have dominion over nature or that humans are separate from nature. If we see ourselves as separate from nature, then we lose our connection to the source of life itself and feel helpless to change our own lives or our world for the better.

As we walk around with our iPods, our iPhones and other electronics, we become more and more cut off from the natural world. That disconnection from the Earth's energy can create a barrier to the flow of energy throughout your body and spirit. The more disconnected you are from the Earth, the less able you are to heal yourself.

Lack of Sleep and Rest During the Healing Process

Most people don't understand how important it is to take time out from their daily lives to rest and sleep. It's the time when the body is able to repair and heal itself. Some people think that they can get by on only four or even seven hours of sleep a night, but this is not true.

Getting enough sleep helps the body to flush out toxins that have accumulated during the day. It also gives your mind time to relax so you can focus on what matters most in life. And getting a good night's rest is essential for your health because it helps keep your immune system strong so it can fight off diseases such as cancer.

In the process of healing, your body, mind and spirit are being re-charged, re-aligned and re-balanced. You will feel an internal movement in the process of the physical, emotional and spiritual healing that's happening.

A lack of sleep or rest during these times can leave you feeling overwhelmed and intense feelings can come up. The key is to allow yourself to be in this space so that you can come out on the other side with a new perspective, new understanding, and a new experience.

The goal here is a total transformation of your body and mind as it relates to your symptoms. This requires taking care of yourself as though you are ill. When a person is wounded or ill, they go through a healing process. An important part of the healing process is rest and sleep. The body can only heal so fast and pushing it beyond that limit will either make things worse or prolong the recovery period.

Therefore, when you want to overcome some problem or condition in your life you must rest and allow your spirit to heal.

Blockages

What is a blockage?

A blockage is anything that prevents the energy from flowing freely. Blockages can be emotions such as anger, fear, anxiety, sadness and grief or physical issues such as injuries, pain or infections. Blockages can also be negative thoughts and emotions that occupy our minds, such as jealousy, anger, resentment, greed, hatred, ignorance and doubts. We have a hard time developing wisdom or healing when our minds are blocked by such thoughts and emotions.

How does it happen?

Blockages happen when we suppress our emotions; ignore them because we are too busy to deal with them; or when we don't know how to express them. Some people can even feel unworthy of healing. This can cause emotions to get stuck in our bodies and create energy blockages.

Denial

This is one of the major causes why we don't heal from any sicknesses, diseases or conditions. We deny that there is a problem and we are ill. When you have a headache, what do you do? You probably take an aspirin or ibuprofen. I've personally tried the, "It doesn't exist method," and it doesn't work that well.

Many times when there is an issue with your body or mind, it is calling to your attention that there is a problem somewhere within us. This can be caused by not eating well enough to get the proper nutrition, not exercising regularly, not getting enough sleep, stress, etc., etc., etc... We all know the causes whether we like them or not.

In order to be completely healed on all levels of our being (mind-body-spirit) we must acknowledge these problems or issues and begin to address them. We must begin to put into practice the changes that need to be made in order to live healthier lives.

Denial makes us lie to ourselves in order to have an "easier" life. Sometimes it can be hard to admit that we have a problem or that we need help. There are occasions when we deny our problems because we don't want to take responsibility for them. Responsible people have to make difficult decisions and do hard work in order to fix their problems – sometimes it's tough, so we'd rather ignore our issues and pretend they don't exist.

Our culture teaches us to ignore, suppress and deny our health problems. However, as we bury our pain, we lose touch with ourselves and with our inner life. Our growth, awareness and spiritual development are stunted.

Denial prevents us from being in touch with what is going on inside of us, which is why it is so difficult to recognize when we are in denial. If you have been a long-term resident of your own personal "denial land," then you may not know how much you are denying.

Some people will argue with their doctor about the diagnosis instead of accepting it and taking the steps needed for recovery. Others will deny that an issue is even present in spite of evidence that clearly indicates otherwise.

Some people will deny their health issues is because they are afraid of being labeled as "sick" or "lazy" if they admit that something is wrong. They may also want to be seen as strong and capable, and because they see their issue as a weakness, it's difficult to admit anything is going on.

Some don't want to heal at all, such as when there is a dependency on drugs or alcohol.

Denial only delays your recovery process – the issue is still there even if you say it's not, just like gravity holds you down on Earth even if you say it doesn't exist.

Help your clients accept what is going on with them. It will help them to also accept themselves as a person (give themselves grace) and make it easier to overcome obstacles that come along on their journey to wholeness.

Fear of Change

Fear of the unknown, fear of letting go, fear of the past repeating, fear of failure, fear of success, fear of not being loved, fear of not being good enough...

This list goes on and on.

Fear is a powerful emotion held deep in our core that can be triggered by any number of experiences.

When we release the past, we create space for our next great desire to manifest.

We often view the physical and emotional realms as separate entities. When we are in pain, we seek out a physical remedy. If we feel low, we look for an emotional pick-me-up. But the two are inextricably linked.

Our bodies and emotions are intricately connected to our spirit and soul. It is not enough to just treat one or two aspects of ourselves without considering the whole picture; one will always affect the other, and vice versa.

To heal completely, physically, emotionally, spiritually and mentally, it is important to first address the root cause of your imbalance – and for many it's fear.

This fear varies from person to person. Some people fear change because they feel a lack of control over their life and circumstances, while others fear what change might mean for their future well-being.

While fear of change could very well be the number one reason why people are not healing, it then could also be the number one reason why they stay in pain and suffering. Because if you think about it, what do we all want? We want to the best for ourselves.

So really, all we really want for ourselves is to be our highest, best versions of ourselves in every area of our lives: emotionally, physically, mentally and spiritually

So why aren't we doing more? Why aren't we making more changes in our lives? Why aren't we making the changes that can help us heal? Simple: because it is scary.

The unknown is scary for most of us; even when the known is painful and causing us harm, it can feel safer than going into the unknown.

We would rather stick with what we know, even if it's painful and harming us, than go into something new that's unfamiliar and may actually be better for us. At least we know what we're getting every day, right?

Lastly in regards to fear, for some who have been through trauma or great stress in life, they could also be afraid of not being able to handle the emotional component of release that may occur during the session. They may feel like they're not ready or they could be afraid of the embarrassment they would feel for letting go with someone else present.

It's important to remember that, though we might use the word, we are not really fixing anything with sound or spiritual healing; we are simply helping people to come into alignment with their original design — with who they really are — and then everything else falls into place on its own: their thoughts become less negative, emotions become more positive, their bodies heal naturally, and they begin manifesting what they truly want in life.